THE TERROR OF THE AUTONS

Serial EEE

A regular character in the Doctor Who series makes his first appearance in this serial - the Master, an arch-villain who might be said to play Moriarty to the Doctor's Sherlock Holmes.

The Master, played by Roger Delgado, is also a Time Lord, and he too has been exiled from his own planet and roams time and space in a Tardis (his vessel takes on the appearance of a horse box).

Another newcomer is Jo Grant, played by Katy Manning. Jo is the Doctor's new assistant, a very junior secret agent on the Unit strength who is perhaps over-blessed with the courage of her own convictions.

John Pertwee returns as Doctor Who with Nicholas Courtney as Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart.

Written by Robert Holmes.

Produced by Barry Letts.

One souvenir remains of the unsuccessful invasion of Earth by the Nestenes, the mysterious aliens from outer space with a strange affinity for plastic. It is an energy unit, and it is on display in a museum.

A mysterious intruder steals the device and takes it to a radio research centre where it is energised by a beam from outer space. The Doctor, with the Brigadier and Jo Grant, goes to the centre to investigate. On his way he receives a visit from a senior Time Lord who warns him that another of their race, an evil being known simply as the Master, is now on Earth.

Almost at once there is a series of attempts upon the lives of the Doctor and his friends, and soon he realises that the Master is working with the Nestenes who are planning a new invasion to conquer the world.

The Doctor's campaign leads him to a circus, to a plastics factory, and to a series of terrifying attacks from the Nestene Autons - the plastic men. And he also has to face attempts on his life from new and sinister weapons devised by the Master.

The climax comes with a pitched battle between the Autons and Unit troops at the radio research centre where the Master is working to open an energy channel through which the main Nestene force will invade.

The Master is defeated, and it seems that he has been destroyed. But the Doctor knows his enemy, and that he will survive to attack again in the not far distant future.

EPISODE ONE

A horse box materialises at a circus and from it steps the Master. At once he brings the proprietor, Rossini, under his control, and with his help steals a Nestene energy unit on display in a museum.

The news of the theft is brought to the Doctor by Jo Grant who he has to accept, with considerable reservations, as his new assistant.

At a radio research centre the Master deals with one of the technicians, Goodge, and hypnotises the other man, Phillips. Using the equipment there to receive a beam he energises the Nestene unit.

A senior Time Lord arrives to warn the Doctor that his old acquaintance has arrived on Earth. He escaped from a prison on their own planet where he was being held because of his genius for destruction. The Master was able to leave in his Tardis before it could be de-energised. Warned by the Time Lord, the Doctor is able to escape the enemy's first attempt on his life with a Volatiser trap.

In Goodge's lunch box the Doctor finds the imploded owner - dead and only six inches long. He realises that the Nestenes have already arrived, and orders a check of nearby plastic factories.

At one of them the Master is talking to the owner and manager, Rex Farrel, telling him that the people he represents can never have too much plastic. As he is bringing Farrel under his control, and ordering him to change the master plan of the factory computer, Jo Grant is discovered on the premises. She, too, is hypnotised and reveals the Doctor's plans. She is then sent back to Unit headquarters, suitably programmed.

McDermott, Farrel's works manager, protests about the changes, and calls in Farrel senior.

Captain Yates finds the box which contained the energy unit and brings it to the Doctor. Jo returns to say that she has drawn a blank at the factory. Then she sees the box, now smoking, and rushes forward to open it.

EPISODE TWO

Doctor Who, realising from Jo's behaviour that the box is a booby trap, manages to throw it out of the window into the river. Then he brings the girl out of her trance.

Using a plastic inflated armchair the Master kills the troublesome McDermott. Farrel senior arrives and orders his son to return the factory to normal production - the Master is unable to bring him under hypnotic control as his will is too strong. Farrel leaves with one of the factory's new products, a troll-type doll that he describes as "disquieting".

At Rossini's circus the Doctor finds a horse box, but before he can examine it he is captured by Rossini's thugs. Jo, who against orders has gone to the circus instead of to the sick bay, telephones the Brigadier, and then manages to release the Doctor. He returns to the horse box/Tardis and removes the dematerialisation circuit. He and Jo are then threatened with lynching by a crowd whipped up by Rossini, but are rescued by a police car.

The Brigadier and Captain Yates arrive at the circus and then try to find out where the police car went. They discover that it was not a police car at all.

EPISODE THREE

The Doctor realises that the policemen are Autons, and he and Jo escape. They are attacked again, but rescued by the Brigadier and his Unit men.

The Doctor tries out his newly-acquired dematerialisation circuit in his own Tardis, only to find that the Master's is a Mark II model. But his enemy is now trapped on Earth.

From the plastics factory a coach load of Autons wearing carnival masks leaves on a promotion tour with a cargo of plastic daffodils which they hand to passers-by. The Master himself, disguised as a telephone mechanic, is in the Doctor's office fitting a new flex.

A Mr. Brownrose, a rather pompous civil servant from the Ministry, brings his problem to the Brigadier. There has been a mysterious outbreak of deaths with no explainable cause - the first two were of McDermott and Farrel senior.

Doctor Who calls on Mrs. Farrel who tells him that her husband was worried, and what his problem was, but adds that he certainly was not ill. When he hears that the new customer was Colonel Master, the Doctor knows what has been happening. He takes away the troll doll.

At his laboratory the Doctor begins an examination of the troll, but soon realises that to do the job properly he will need more equipment. While he waits for this, he and the Brigadier make a further examination of the plastics factory. They leave Captain Yates and Jo in the laboratory, with the doll lying in a stream of hot air from a lighted bunsen burner.

At the factory the Doctor finds a plastic daffodil, and the Brigadier discovers that Farrel hired a coach.

Back in the laboratory, Doctor Who receives a telephone call from the Master, who presses a sonic device. The plastic coils of the telephone cord begin to strangle the Doctor.

EPISODE FOUR

Fortunately the Brigadier arrives in time to rescue the Doctor by pulling the flex away from the wall plug.

The Master arranges to meet the Autons at a quarry, and tells them that in a few hours time the main Nestene assault force will land on earth unopposed - when the operation signal is transmitted.

While the Doctor tries to analyse the daffodil, the Brigadier arranges for the Auton coach to be destroyed by the air force. Jo uses her radio set and is attacked by the daffodil. The Doctor rescues her, and realises that these weapons are activated by short wave radio.

The Master arrives at the laboratory, kidnaps the Doctor and Jo, and takes them to the Auton coach. The Brigadier has to call off the air strike, and the coach sets off for the radio research centre - with the Doctor and Jo lying bound on the floor. Using the brake pedal lights he is able to signal to the brigadier to warn him about the daffodils, and that the radio station is their destination. Then he and Jo escape.

The Master reaches the station, and by the time Doctor Who and the Brigadier have followed him into the control cabin the Nestenes have arrived -- a writhing coil of energy suspended above the aerials. And they have taken over the mastery of the computer themselves. The Doctor manages to convince the Master that he is now in as great danger as the rest of them, and between them the two Time Lords are able to destroy the coil before it can come any further.

The Master escapes, but the Doctor knows that they will meet again as, like himself, his enemy is now trapped on Earth.

DOCTOR WHO

SERIAL 'FFF'

THE MIND OF EVIL

A revolutionary new method has been perfected of treating hardened and dangerous criminals by extracting the negative or evil particles directly from their brains. The man who invented the machine that carries out the process is the Swiss Professor Keller.

Doctor Who, who distrusts tampering with the mind, goes to Stangmoor Prison to attend a demonstration, but something goes wrong and a number of deaths occur. The Doctor thinks that the Keller machine is developing an intelligence of its own by feeding on the evil in criminal minds.

In the meantime, in London, Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart is dealing with security for the first-ever World Peace Conference, and having to grapple with mysterious events which reach their climax in the sudden death of the Chinese delegate. The Brigadier becomes convinced that Chin Lee, an attractive young girl who is one of the Chinese aides, is implicated.

Captain Yates is arranging for the transport of a nerve gas missile to the sea where it is to be dumped, as this type of weapon has now been banned.

All these events are linked in the scheme of Professor Keller, who is revealed as the Doctor's old adversary, the Master. With the help of rioting convicts he takes over the prison, capturing the Doctor and Jo in the process. Then he hi-jacks the missile.

The Doctor has already found out that inside the Keller machine is an alien creature, a parasite which feeds on minds.

By the time the Brigadier has discovered what is happening at the prison, and has rescued the Doctor and Jo, the Master has the missile ready to fire on London, where he intends to destroy all the delegates at the Peace Conference and so provoke a war in which he will emerge the only victor. When all seems lost, the Doctor finds a way to defeat his enemy, using as his weapon the alien mind parasite brought to earth by the Master himself.

Jon Pertwee plays Doctor Who, with Katy Manning as Jo Grant, Nicholas Courtney as the Brigadier and Richard Franklin as Captain Yates. Roger Delgado appears as the Master.

Episode One.

At Stangmoor Prison an execution - modern style - is about to be carried out. Professor Keller, who is a Swiss, has invented a machine capable of extracting the negative or evil impulses from a man's brain and storing them in a box. Doctor Who, worried by the idea of tampering with minds, is present with Jo.

The "execution" - of a hardened, violent criminal called Barnham - takes place and the Keller machine registers a higher degree than ever before. Then a medical student present dies (of heart failure) with marks like the scratches of rats on his face.

In the meantime, in London, the Brigadier is making arrangements for the first ever world peace conference, and having to deal with complaints from the Chinese delegation. Captain Chin Lee first reports the theft of confidential documents, and then that the Chinese delegate has been murdered. After leaving the Brigadier, Chin Lee herself burns the papers.

At Stangmoor Professor Kettering, the scientist in charge of the Keller machine, dies while he is examining the apparatus. The post mortem shows that he has been drowned.

Doctor Who, testing the console, sees an abyss of flames opening before him.

Episode Two.

Jo comes in, and the flames at once die away. Then Captain Yates arrives to take the Doctor back to London, but before he leaves the scientist orders the Keller machine room to be locked and barred to everyone.

Yates makes telephone arrangements for a missile escort. A workman is tapping the line - the Master in disguise. The missile, a Thunderbolt, with a warhead full of nerve gas, is to be dumped at the bottom of the ocean.

The Brigadier takes the Doctor to see the new Chinese delegate, Fu Peng. The two men are at once friends, as the Doctor speaks Fu Peng's particular brand of Chinese fluently.

Barnham has now lost his memory and is completely docile - an idiot or a saint? The latest prisoner for "execution" is Harry Mailer who, with a smuggled gun, breaks out of his cell.

When he hears about Chin Lee, the Doctor remembers that a Chinese girl was with Keller when he installed the machine. In the meantime the Master is telling a hypnotised Chin Lee that she is to kill the American delegate.

At the prison Mailer leads a revolt, and Jo is one of the hostages taken.

By a ruse Chin Lee lures Alcott, the American delegate, to the Chinese delegation's hotel suite. Instead of Chin Lee he sees a Chinese dragon.

Episode Three.

The Doctor, Fu Peng, and the Brigadier arrive and also see the monster, which disappears when Chin Lee is knocked out. Alcott is not dead, just suffering from intense shock. The Doctor discovers that the girl is wearing a telepathic amplifier which is picking up impulses emanating from Stangmoor Prison. He realises that she is under the control of the Master.

The Master is on his way to Stangmoor where Mailer is demanding a safe conduct for himself and his friends in return for the hostages. Jo, however, manages to get the gun, and turns Mailer over to the governor.

The Master - or Professor Keller as he is known there - arrives at the jail. He assures the governor that any problems can be overcome, and asks to see the next candidate - Mailer. When they are alone, he produces gas grenades and masks, and soon the whole prison is in the hands of the convicts. When Doctor Who returns, he is taken to the Master, who wants him to adjust the machine while he himself gets on with the business of dealing with the peace conference.

The Doctor escapes but is recaptured. He is then taken to the machine and fitted with Chin Lee's amplifier. At once he begins to see a procession of his former enemies, led by the Daleks.

Episode Four.

The Doctor collapses. The Master arrives, turns down the controls, and orders Mailer to put the Doctor in the cell with Jo. But first the Master tells his old adversary that while he is away the Doctor will have to control the machine. The Doctor warns him that in the machine is an alien creature that feeds on the evil in the mind..... soon it may feed on his. The Master then tries to turn off the machine, but it can no longer be controlled from the console. He manages to escape and bars the door.

The Master tells Mailer about his plan to hi-jack the missile and then aim it at the peace conference. With this means of blackmail the convict and his friends will be able to demand a free pardon, unlimited money, and a ticket to anywhere in the world.

The missile is hi-jacked and most of the escort are killed. Benton is left unconscious. Captain Yates manages to follow the new convoy to a disused airfield, is wounded and captured.

Benton is able to tell the Brigadier what happened, and the latter decides to take a look at Stangmoor prison - from a helicopter.

The Doctor decides to try to destroy the mind parasite in the machine, but when they reach the process room it has gone. It has learned how to move. Mailer and another convict enter, and the machine rematerialises.

Episode Five.

Mailer goes, and the machine follows. It has already killed the other man.

The Doctor and Jo acquire a bodyguard - Barnham - but they are recaptured. However, the Brigadier has already seen them from the air.

The Master returns to the prison, and using the threat to kill Jo forces the Doctor to help him to bring the machine under control. They manage this by putting a coil round it.

By a ruse the Brigadier manages to invade the prison, but Mailer still has Jo and the Doctor as hostages.

Episode Six.

The Brigadier shoots Mailer. The other convicts are locked up, but Jo takes charge of Barnham.

Yates manages to escape from the airfield, and the Brigadier leaves for mobile headquarters.

The Doctor is going to try once more to destroy the machine, which has broken the coil and escaped again. It rematerialises and begins to drag Jo and the Doctor towards it, but Barnham arrives, and they discover that his mind acts as a screen.

At headquarters the Brigadier decides to use the abort mechanism of the missile when the Master fires it.

The Doctor arranges to bring in a maximum power boost to destroy the mind parasite, but then he receives a telephone call from the Master. They make a bargain; the Doctor will hand over the dematerialisation circuit from the enemy's Tardis in exchange for the missile. The Doctor is not at all happy about the idea of letting the Master roam free, and then the mention of the machine by Jo makes him realise that they have a weapon.

The Master has already negatived the abort mechanism of the rocket.

With Barnham carrying the machine they leave for the Masters' headquarters, with the circuit. With the Master pinned down by the machine, the Doctor re-connects the abort mechanism. But the Master escapes, killing Barnham in the process. The missile is exploded, destroying the mind parasite.

Doctor Who realises that he has dropped the circuit. Then he gets a telephone call from the Master, who found the missing piece of machinery, and is now free to roam through time and space once more.

DOCTOR WHO

SERIAL 'GGG'

THE CLAWS OF AXOS

When an alien space ship lands near the English south coast and sends out distress signals Doctor Who and the Brigadier go on board to meet the crew. These are the Axons, humanoid, friendly and beautiful - like golden statues. They explain that they need the hospitality of earth to rest and regenerate themselves, and in return they offer a gift of Axonite, a material with miraculous properties which could solve many of earth's problems.

The Doctor's suspicions of the visitors are confirmed when Jo tells him how she saw an Axon evolving out of the wall of the ship. He discovers that the vessel, the Axons and Axonite are all parts of one living creature, Axos; a parasite which will absorb all living energy on a planet, leaving a dead world. The Master has brought Axos to destroy both the earth and the Doctor.

When he learns of the Axos desire for the secret of time travel, the Doctor uses his Tardis to force the monster into a time loop. The Master, however, may have escaped to fight again.

Episode One

Bill Filer arrives from Washington to discuss the problem of the Master with the Brigadier, who at the same time has to deal with Mr. Chinn from the Ministry of Defence. Chinn, a politician and a busybody, is deeply disturbed by the fact that there is no file for the Doctor who is, apparently, an alien.

All these deliberations stop when a report comes through that an unidentified flying object has landed on the British south coast.

This is a British crisis, and so Filer goes off on his own to look at the spaceship. A long tendril comes out and draws him in.

The object has landed near the National Power Complex, source of Britain's supply of electricity, and Sir George Hardiman, head of the establishment, and his head of research, Winsor, meet the Brigadier, Chinn and the Doctor to decide what to do. Then they receive a radio message from the ship, asking for help because all their fuel systems are exhausted. They go into the ship, and as each of them passes through the doors an analysis pattern is flashed to the centre. The Doctor is immediately identified as a different species. Then they meet four Axons, beautiful statue-like people. Their leader claims that their own planetary system has been crippled by solar flare. Their science has taken an organic path, and their ship has been grown from a single cell. Now its nutrient has been exhausted, and they would like to stay on earth until their systems have been replenished. The Axon offers a gift - Axonite, the source of their growth technique. It uses the energy it absorbs not only to copy, but to restructure and re-create any given substance, if necessary improving on the original. He then demonstrates how a small toad can be made into a six foot high monster. The Doctor is puzzled how, with this substance at their disposal, the Axons ran out of fuel.

In the meantime Bill Filer finds himself pinioned by tendrils, together with a fellow prisoner - the Master, who has brought the space ship to earth.

Jo, left behind by the others, has made her own way on board Axos. She thinks she hears Bill Filer's voice calling for help, and begins to look for him. Then she sees an Axon "growing" out of the wall, passing through various stages of monster, and then becoming humanoid.

Episode Two

Jo screams, and the Doctor and the Brigadier find her. The Axon explains that emissions from the energy cells in that part of the ship are very strong, and have probably given her a hallucination.

Chinn reports to his Minister that he is having difficulties about Axonite with the Brigadier, who claims that this is an international matter. The Minister warns his subordinate that he will be held responsible if anything goes wrong, but gives him special powers.

The Doctor suggests that the use of Axonite should be confined to laboratories until an analysis can be made of its potential.

Filer is taken to the replication centre.

When the Brigadier learns that the Axons have made an agreement with Chinn giving Britain world-wide rights to Axonite, the Brigadier seizes the substance at pistol-point. Then Chinn orders the arrest of the Brigadier and his staff by regular troops under the command of Captain Harper, who have just been sent in by the Ministry.

The Doctor, left behind with Jo, questions her about what she saw and heard. They are both taken to the National Power Complex where the Doctor joins Winsor to begin the analysis of Axonite.

A replica of Filer has been created, and is sent to bring the Doctor back to Axos.

The Master is released to ensure that Axonite receives world wide distribution, but his Tardis is retained. Filer manages to escape.

The imitation Filer arrives, closely followed by the real man. There is a fight; the fake falls into the cyclotron, and turns into a mass of Axonite.

The Master sends a message to the United Nations.

The analysis of Axonite begins, and at once there is a crisis on Axos itself. The central command orders the immediate recovery of the substance.

The Axonite, now activated begins to burst out of the cyclotron. The Doctor realises that everything to do with Axos is part of a single organisation. Three Axon monsters arrive from the ship and tendrils stretch out of the pulsating mass towards them.

Episode Three

Doctor Who and Jo are taken back to Axos.

The Master's message has reached the United Nations, and Captain Harker receives orders from the Ministry to hand over control to the Brigadier.

The voice of Axos tells the Doctor that because of human greed Axonite will soon be spread right round the world. Then the nutrition cycle of Axos will begin and every last particle of energy, every last cell of living matter on Earth will be sucked dry.

Back at the complex Chinn is told to arrange immediate world-wide distribution of Axonite by air. Filer is in hospital, delirious.

The Doctor's Tardis is sent to the complex and the Master, disguised as a general, enters it and sets about trying to get the ship into working order.

In the meantime Axos is trying to extract the secret of time travel from the Doctor. His co-operation is forced when he sees Jo, under the influence of Axonite, begin to age very rapidly. Axos proposes to draw the additional power required from the complex.

Filer comes round and is able to warn the Brigadier. The Axons are beginning to take over the reactor.

The Master is taken prisoner by the Brigadier, and agrees to help to defeat Axos. He absorbs the surge of energy into the Tardis, and then switches it through to Axos.

Episode Four

While the energy surge is convulsing Axos the Doctor and Jo escape and return to the complex. Then Axos feeds the power back but Hardiman manages to disconnect the cables, dying in the effort.

The Doctor warns the others that soon the nutrition cycle of Axos will begin. He will try to prevent this, but he needs the Master's help.

The Doctor tells the Master that Earth is doomed and that he wants to escape. The two Time Lords manage to re-activate the Tardis, which dematerialises and then arrives within Axos. The Doctor offers a bargain to the parasite. They will link drive systems so that Axos will become a Tardis and the Tardis will become part of Axos.

Axos has already begun to absorb the energy at the nuclear complex, and then the process suddenly stops.

The Doctor takes Axos into a time loop while a battle is going on at the complex between soldiers and Axon monsters. The disappearance of the parent body destroys the creatures, and the Doctor manages to break out of the loop. He returns to earth, and realises that the Time Lords have programmed his ship so that it will always return to Earth. He does not know if the Master has escaped in his own Tardis, and if he is free to roam once more.

COLONY IN SPACE

At last Doctor Who has succeeded in making a dematerialisation circuit for his Tardis, and now he hopes to have the ship working again. Jo Grant is sceptical; she cannot believe that the Tardis ever worked at all, so the Doctor takes her inside and fits the new circuit. The Tardis begins to operate, seemingly of its own accord, but, as the Doctor surmises, it is being directed by the Time Lords. Then it dematerialises before the astonished Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart.

The Doctor and Jo arrive on an alien, though earth-type, planet in the year 2471. There they meet a band of hard-working colonists who clubbed together to buy an old space-ship and then left an overcrowded earth so that they could begin a new life. But they are already in difficulties. For no apparent reason their crops refuse to grow, and their outlying farms are ravaged by attacks from mysterious giant lizards.

Soon Jo and the Doctor become involved in the struggle between the colonists and the mineralogists of the Interplanetary Mining Corporation - the I.M.C. - who want to exploit the rich mineral deposits of the planet, a process which will leave it gutted and useless for human habitation.

The Doctor finds himself stranded on the planet when his Tardis is stolen by the Primitives, the savage descendants of the race that once inhabited the great ruined city near the colonists' settlement. He discovers that the lizard attacks are being faked by the I.M.C. men to drive away the colonists, and he prepares his evidence for the Adjudicator, who has been sent from Earth to resolve the dispute. But when this top official arrives he turns out to be none other than the Doctor's old enemy, the Master.

The Doctor tries to find out why the Master is interested in this particular planet, and discovers that hidden in the depths of the ruined city is an immensely powerful weapon -the Doomsday Machine, which can blast whole planets from existence. It is maintained by the Alien Priests, a non-human race whose service has degenerated into a religious ritual.

The Doctor and Jo struggle to prevent the I.M.C. men from driving the colonists from the planet, and to stop the Master from gaining possession of the Doomsday Machine, and so making himself ruler of the galaxy. They receive unexpected help from the Guardian, the sole survivor of a vanished super race.

The Doctor convinces the Guardian that the Doomsday Machine must never be used. The weapon is set to self-destruction. Jo, the Doctor and the Master barely manage to escape with their lives, and, as they leave the city, find themselves prisoners of the I.M.C. men. In a final struggle the colonists are victorious, and the Master makes his escape in the confusion.

The Tardis has been recovered from the Primitives, and the Doctor is able to tell the colonists that their crops will now grow, as it was radiation from the machine that was contaminating the soil of the planet. The Doctor and Jo take off in the Tardis and re-materialise in front of an astonished Brigadier, for whom they have been away only for a matter of seconds.

EPISODE ONE

The Time Lords discover that their report on the Doomsday Machine is missing, obviously taken from their files by the Master. They decide to use the Doctor to solve this problem, and re-programme his Tardis to serve their purpose.

In the Unit laboratory the Doctor is working on his ship without much success, watched by a sympathetic but sceptical Jo. He takes her inside, fits his new dematerialisation circuit, and the machine takes off, just as the Brigadier comes in with the result of the latest sighting of the Master.

The Tardis materialises on a bleak planet in the year 2471, and very soon the travellers find themselves among colonists from earth. They have been there for a year, and because their crops will not grow are in danger of starvation. Also on the planet are the original inhabitants, a primitive race who converse telepathically. They take away the Tardis.

A message comes through to the headquarters area that one of the outlying buildings of the colony is being attacked by some kind of giant reptile. By the time that the leader of the colony, Ashe, with the Doctor and Winton (who is in charge of security) arrive the Leeson's are dead, and the interior of their dome is wrecked, apparently by something with giant claws.

Norton, starving and in rags, arrives claiming to be the sole survivor of another colony that was wiped out by giant lizards.

EPISODE TWO

The robot is halted by Caldwell, a mining engineer who is a member of an Interplanetary Mining Corporation expedition that has come to make a survey. Apparently Earth Control in error have assigned this planet both for colonisation and for mining. Caldwell takes the Doctor back to the expedition's space ship.

Ashe, who has established a truce with the Primitives, is disturbed when Norton tells him that the few survivors of the lizard attacks on his own colony were wiped out by the natives.

At the I.M.C. ship Captain Dent is receiving a report from one of his officers on the results of the survey so far. There is apparently enough duralinium to build a million earth living units. Dent is quite aware that the planet was assigned for colonisation, and completely determined that it will be used for mining - I.M.C.'s bonuses are very large.

Caldwell tells Dent that he was shocked to hear of the deaths; the captain dismisses the matter as a regrettable incident. Dent interviews the Doctor, and tells him that minerals are desperately needed for the hundred thousand million people back on earth. Then he tells one of his officers, Morgan, to take the Doctor back to the wrecked dome. Where monsters have struck once, they can strike again.

Back at the colony's headquarters Norton kills the engineer in charge of the electricity supply and the Primitive who was helping him. Then he claims that he had to kill the native when the Primitive attacked him after murdering the colonist.

Caldwell protests against Dent's actions, but is warned about what will happen if the I.M.C. blacklists him.

Morgan takes the Doctor back to the dome, and then the robot enters with huge claws attached to each of its arms.

EPISODE THREE

The Doctor escapes and returns to headquarters to find that the I.M.C. ship has landed nearby. Dent claims that there has been some confusion about the allocation of the planet, and sends for an Adjudicator from earth to decide the issue.

Jo and Winton enter the space ship to try to find evidence of how the monster attacks are faked, and are taken prisoner. Dent then has them chained to an explosive device activated by remote control, and tells the Doctor that when the Adjudicator arrives he must make no accusations against the I.M.C. men.

Jo manages to free first herself, and then Winton. She is recaptured, but he escapes, and Caldwell shelters him in a tent. Winton then returns to headquarters, and begins to plan an attack on the space ship.

Doctor Who persuades Caldwell to help him to free Jo. The engineer tells Dent that if the girl is not released he will stop his mining survey at once. Jo is freed, but then captured by the Primitives who take her away.

The Doctor tells Winton that his idea of a frontal attack is suicidal and helps him to devise a less dangerous plan. Before long they have compelled Dent to surrender.

When the Doctor learns that Jo has fallen into the hands of the Primitives he makes his way to their city.

EPISODE FOUR

The Doctor leaves as the Adjudicator's ship flies in. On the I.M.C. vessel Winton discovers the robot's claws and the other equipment used to fake the monster attacks.

Doctor Who reaches the city, and when he tells the Primitives that he has come to buy Jo back he is allowed to enter. He finds a race of non-humanoid priests whose function seems to be to minister to a gigantic machine, a survival from a highly advanced civilisation. There are indications that their rites include sacrifice. Then the Guardian appears, the sole survivor of the race of super beings who once ruled the city. He lets Jo and the Doctor leave.

The I.M.C. men turn the tables on Winton, and he loses the evidence. The Adjudicator - the Master in disguise - begins the hearing. Jo and the Doctor arrive just as the Master adjourns the tribunal to make his decision. He warns the Doctor to keep silence for both their sakes.

The Master rules that the planet is unsuitable for colonisation but adds that if there is anything of particular historical interest there, he will be prepared to reconsider. Winton begins to plan another attack.

Masquerading as the Adjudicator, he uses the radio to summon the I.M.C. men to another meeting. Norton tries to send a warning, using his own I.M.C. communicator, but is prevented by one of the colonists. He kills the man, but his instrument is smashed in the fight. Then he shouts a warning to Dent and is killed by Winton. A gun battle follows, and the Master decides that the time has come for the Doctor and Jo to become the victims of stray bullets.

EPISODE FIVE

Ashe comes up, and so the Master, who intends to maintain his pose as the Adjudicator, is forced to abandon his plan. Winton creeps up behind Dent and forces the captain to order his men to stop firing. The Master tells the colonists that he will examine the ruined city to assess the planet's claim to historical interest. They refuse to believe the Doctor when he accuses the Master of being an imposter.

When the Master first came to earth the Doctor managed to acquire a key to his Tardis. Now he proposes to use this to search his enemy's ship to find some convincing evidence of his masquerade.

Winton orders Dent and his men to take off in their ship. They leave, but instead of making for earth land behind a range of hills some fifty kilometres away. Through a check with Earth Control the captain discovers that the "Adjudicator" is a fake.

In the Master's Tardis the Doctor finds the credentials of the real Adjudicator, but then he and Jo are taken prisoners. The Doctor is forced to act as the Master's guide to the Primitive City. Jo will remain in the Tardis as a hostage.

The I.M.C. men return to the colony, recapture their guns, and force the colonists to surrender. Dent claims that on the Adjudicator's decision, government of the planet passed into his hands, and now the colonists are to be tried for treason.

Doctor Who and the Master leave for the ruined city; the Doctor manages to drop his key outside the door as they go.

Ashe and Winton are sentenced to death, but the sentence will be suspended if they and their followers leave immediately. Caldwell is ordered to check their ship, and reports to Dent that it is in poor shape and may blow up on take-off. The I.M.C. captain's only reaction is to order all his men out of the area before the ship leaves.

As the Master and the Doctor arrive at the city gate, Caldwell and Morgan, ordered to search the Master's ship, find the key and go in. The Master's alarm gives him the signal.

EPISODE SIX

The Doctor and the Master are taken into the city.

Caldwell manages to free Jo and is told to put her on the space ship with the colonists, but he hides her in a buggy. The colonists enter their old ship, and the I.M.C. men move clear. A guard is left to watch the ship through binoculars.

Dent hears that Caldwell has left for the city, and sends Morgan after him. Winton overpowers the I.M.C. guard.

Jo and Caldwell see the space ship take off and then explode in the air.

The Master and the Doctor are locked in a small room. The former says that he intends to gain control of the machine. and by threatening to use it hold the whole galaxy to ransom. On the one and only occasion it was used in the past it produced the Crab nebula. The two Time Lords escape and find their way to the room where the controls of the Doomsday Machine are housed. The Master offers the Doctor a share in his plan of conquest, but the latter feels that absolute power is evil. He wants to see the universe, not to rule it.

The Master raises his gun to shoot the Doctor, but is prevented by the arrival of the Guardian. The Doctor manages to persuade the super being that the machine's potential for evil is too great, and the Guardian forces the Master to activate the self-destruct mechanism. He tells the two Time Lords to leave as he himself begins to flicker and disintegrate, and the whole building begins to shudder. As the Master and the Doctor rush out they see Primitives and priests moving, as if hypnotised, towards the machine. At one of the corridor junctions they meet Jo and Caldwell. As the four pass through the city gate there is a tremendous explosion, and just outside Morgan and his I.M.C. men are waiting.

Morgan is about to fire when he and his men are surrounded by a line of armed colonists. In the fighting he is killed and the Master escapes. The I.M.C. men are forced to surrender.

All the colonists left the space ship when Winton overpowered the guard, with the exception of Ashe who sacrificed himself to get the I.M.C. men out of the way.

The Doctor is able to tell the victors that now that the Doomsday machine has been destroyed radiation will no longer poison the soil, and crops will grow. The I.M.C. men return to earth, but Caldwell decides to become a colonist.

The Doctor and Jo return to earth and re-materialise in front of a puzzled Brigadier - as far as he is concerned they have been away only for a few seconds.

DOCTOR WHO

SERIAL JJJ

THE DAEMONS

At the Devil's Dyke, near the peaceful English village of Devil's End, an excavation is in progress. Professor Horner and his team plan to cut open the barrow at the end of the Dyke, and television outside broadcast cameras are to cover the event.

The professor scoffs at the warnings of Miss Hawthorne a local white witch, that this will bring about disaster, although mysterious and terrifying events in the village seems to prove her right. However, the new vicar, a certain Mr. Magister, also refuses to listen to the lady.

The Doctor is strangely worried by events at Devil's Dyke and he and Jo go to watch the excavation.

The barrow is cut open and mysterious forces erupt, killing the professor and burying the Doctor. Yates and Benton, who have watched the outside broadcast of the dig, set off for Devils's End at once. By the time the Doctor recovers from the shock of his experience a mysterious heat-barrier has sealed off the village and surrounding area from the outside world.

Soon it emerges that the new vicar is none other than the Master, using his powers to call up an immensely powerful being whose space-ship has been buried in the barrow for hundreds of years. The Master's aim is to persuade the alien to make him ruler of the Earth.

The Doctor and his friends struggle to defeat this plan. The Doctor works out a way to defeat the heat-barrier and tries to break the Master's hold over the terrified villagers. But he is unable to prevent him from summoning up the Daemon for a final confrontation. The Doctor pleads with Azal to leave earth and let mankind work out its own destiny. But his plea is refused and the Daemon is about to strike him down when an unexpected action by Jo saves the day. Azal is destroyed and the Master is finally defeated and captured by UNIT.

EPISODE ONE

At the village of Devil's End television cameras are lined up to watch the opening of a prehistoric barrow at midnight on the feast of Beltane. Professor Horner is the archaeologist in charge, and Miss Hawthorne, a local white witch, breaks into a preliminary programme to warn all concerned to leave the tomb alone. Doctor Who, watching the programme, tries to remember something he knows about Devil's End and the Beltane Fires. He sets off for the village with Jo.

There have been strange gusts of wind in the village and one man dropped dead in the churchyard - the local doctor certified heart failure; Miss Hawthorne says it was fright. The vicar, Canon Smallwood, left suddenly, and the new incumbent is a Mr. Magister.

Jo and the Doctor lose their way to the village when a signpost is mysteriously changed round, but they manage to reach the local public house, and then make their way to the site of the dig.

Professor Horner breaks through to the tomb, just as Doctor Who reaches him. Both are thrown to the ground by an icy wind. The earth shakes, and in the church a gargoye comes to life.

EPISODE TWO

Captain Yates and Sergeant Benton see what is happening on a television screen, and leave at once for Devil's End. The Brigadier is out at a dinner.

The Master thanks Azal for rising at his command, and arranges that a flagstone in the church, newly inscribed with a magic figure, shall be their meeting place.

The professor has been frozen to death. Doctor Who just manages to survive.

In the churchyard the village policeman is crushed by something that leaves the mark of a cloven hoof six inches wide. Yates and Benton arrive in a helicopter and see a line of huge prints. A giant shape appears in the church and is welcomed by the Master. Miss Hawthorne and Benton get a glimpse of it.

The Doctor regains consciousness, and realises now the nature of the menace in Devil's End.

The Brigadier arrives, but cannot get into the village which is protected by a fiery force field.

EPISODE THREE

The Doctor manages to drive the creature away, and tells Jo that this was not the creature that Miss Hawthorne saw - that was something a hundred times more terrible; something far more real, and far more dangerous.

The Doctor explains to the others that the creature conjured up by the opening of the barrow and the Master's ceremonies is an immensely powerful alien being from a far off planet. The Daemons arrived on earth a million years before and have been responsible for every development of man since. Dealing with earth is to them an intellectual game, a scientific experiment, and they are completely amoral. If the Daemon decides his experiment is a failure, he will just crush the world. He will make three appearances, and on the third he will decide what the fate of the planet is to be.

The Master calls a meeting of the villagers, and with the assistance of Bok, the gargoyle, terrorises them into promising to help him. One of the Master's helpers tries to kill the Doctor, using the Unit helicopter, but crashes into the heat barrier.

Azal, the Daemon, materialises once again; the second appearance.

EPISODE FOUR

The Daemon tells the Master that he alone will decide to whom to give his knowledge and power; Earth to him smells of failure and he may decide to destroy it. But he wants to speak with the Doctor.

The Doctor is attacked by maypole dancers, and tied to the pole.

Yates and Jo, in the church, watch the Master hold another meeting of his coven of witches.

The Doctor is about to be burned by a witch, but with the help of Miss Hawthorne manages to extricate himself.

In the church Azal appears again.

EPISODE FIVE

Jo and Yates are discovered, and the Master decides that the girl will be a welcome addition to the Sabbat. Yates manages to free himself, and rushes outside to tell the Doctor about Jo's plight.

The Doctor and the Brigadier's scientific expert manage to make an opening in the heat barrier. In the meantime, inside the church, Azal is staggering, apparently in pain, and the gargoyle Bok collapses. The Doctor goes into the church. Azal, after hearing both what he and the Master have to say, decides to pass his power to the Doctor. The Doctor refuses, and the Daemon is about to destroy him. But Jo offers herself as a sacrifice instead. Azal cannot handle a fact so illogical and irrational, and he destroys himself. The barrier vanishes, and this time the Master is captured.
